WHIRLWIND FINISH TO FIGHT FOR JUDGESHIP

Five Candidates in Field and Sentiment Not Crystalized.

PRIMARIES ON SEPT. 21

Popular Interest in Non-Partisan Contest for Judge has Overshadowed Campaign for Party Nominations for County Offices.

Centre County's big preliminary political campaign will come to a close on next Tuesday, September 21st. The primaries to be held on that day will determine who shall be the two nominees for Judge and also who shall be nominated for the several county offices. Nomitnations will also be made for borough and township offices throughout the county.

In a large measure the interest manifested in the Judgeship campaign has overshadowed all other contests. The spirited fight put up by all five candidates for Judge has been a most interesting one and has enlivened the campaign in all sections. Political observers profess to have pretty well defined views as to the probable outcome at the primaries, although a strictly impartial view is that the situation is one where at the eleventh hour of the campaign sentiment really has not crystalized decisively on any one or two candidates. The five aspirants for Judge are Judge Orvis, Clement Dale, Henry C. Quigley, J. Kennedy Johnston and N. B. Spangler. The bulk of the temperance vote will likely go to Mr. Dale and Mr. Johnston. In some measure the Republican vote will be divided between Mr. Dale and Mr. Quigley, and on the other hand the Democratic vote will be split up as between Judge Orvis and Mr. Spangler. Under the law the Judgeship campaign is absolutely non-partisan and a voter may support any candidate of his choice without in any manner affecting his party standing.

Some of the candidates for Judge have been waging their campaign along party lines, ignoring the spirit of the law making the Judgeship a nonpartisan matter, and at the same time respecting the spirit of the law prohibiting pre-election pledges regarding the granting of liquor licenses. This is but one phase of a situation which has been attended with numerous side-lights to entertain the voters.

There are no contests for the several Democratic nominations for county offices, due in part to the fact that the present Democratic officials were conceded renomination without opposition and also because of the general feeling throughout the county that this is a Republican year.

On the Republican side there are several lively contests to be determined at the primaries. The withdrawal of G. Willard Hall for nomination for Prothonotary leaves Ira G. Burket, of Half-moon Township, without opposition for this place on the ticket. There is a spirited contest under way for County Treasurer between David Chambers, of Snow Shoe Township, and A. H. Hartswick, of State College. Both are exceptionally popular and each has waged an active canvass. While the two have overlooked no points in the endeavor to win, and at times the contest has been a decidedly strenuous one, the friends of Mr. Chambers and Mr. Hartswick have understood from the beginning that each entered the campaign pledged to support the other if nominated. This broad minded spirit on the part of two such strong candidates has commanded popular admiration for both in Republican circles, and a united, harmonious party support is assured regardless of which should be nominated.

For Sheriff George H. Yarnell, of Zion, has no opposition for the Republican nomination. He is a hustler from the word "go" and once the primaries are over he may be expected to inject into the campaign all the enthusiasm and energy which made his campaign of four years ago a notable one. He is immensely popular and it is universally conceded that his nomination is equivalent to election.

For District Attorney James C. Furst, of Bellefonte, has no opposition for nomination and the fact that he will again be on the ticket is cause for congratulation among Republicans. He waged an energetic campaign four years ago and polled a splendid vote despite the Democratic sweep of that period. His friends over the county are entirely confident that he will be on the winning ticket this year.

For Recorder there is a strenuous fight among William H. Brown, Harry W. Schreffler and J. Wells Smith. The former two are from Bellefonte. Mr. Smith is from below Howard. Mr. Brown led the Republican ticket when he was elected Recorder eight years ago, and again when the ticket was defeated four years ago. This year he says he is putting up the hardest campaign of his career. Mr. Smith and Mr. Schreffler are worthy rivals and each has devoted as much time as possible to calling on voters. The best of feeling prevails among the aspirants and their respective friends are awaiting the outcome with interest.

For County Commissioners (two to be nominated) there are quite a number of aspirants, and all actively at work. They are Robert D. Musser, of near Spring Mills a popular Republican whose friends are urging that Penns Valley be accorded recognition on the Republican ticket; Harry S. Stuart and George H. Houck, both of Rush Township, both hustlers and popular; Harry P. Austin, of Milesburg, a man whose energy seems unlimited and whose confidence in his ability to capture one of the nominations compels admiration; Isaac Miller, of Bellefonte, well on in years but remarkably active and a hard worker in any campaign.

For Register there are three Republican aspirants—Frank Sasserman and G. W. Rees, of Bellefonte, and Albert Bierly, of Milesburg. Mr. Sasserman is one of the younger Republicans in the county. He made a good run for the nomination for Register four years ago, but another candidate received more votes and Mr. Sasserman uncomplainingly accepted the result and turned in to help elect his successful rival. Mr. Rees is one of the "war horses" of the party and is known wherever Republicans are to be found. "Wash" has been a familiar figure in virtually every campaign here for many years and he is determined to make the present one bring him the nomination if hard work can do it. Mr. Bierly is quite well known in his home section. He took an active part in the movement to have the court revoke the license of the Kohlbecker hotel at Milesburg a year ago.

There are several candidates in the field for Republican nomination for County Auditor. Two are to be nominated. The group includes Clement H. Gramley, of Rebersburg, whose popularity extends in all directions and whose party enthusiasm has been a refreshing factor in every campaign for years. "Clem" has got a lot of fun out of the preliminary campaign, his genial, sunny disposition making him friends everywhere. If nominated he will make a strong candidate at the election in November. If defeated at the primaries he will not be found sulking in his tent but with his coat off for the success of the whole Republican ticket. Another candidate is Ralph Hartsock, of Huston Township, and his friends are putting forth the strong argument that his nomination would mean merited recognition on the ticket for the upper Bald Eagle valley. W. G. Saxion, of Benner Township, and W. B. Krape, of Haines Township, also are candidates and are making an active canvass. Mr. Saxion is a very estimable gentleman and his friends are deeply interested in his campaign, Mr. Krape is hustling in the closing hours of the campaign and hopes to be one of the winners.

Let Everybody Help.

The nurses of the Bellefonte hospital will have a cake and candy sale at the Y. M. C. A. building on Saturday, September 18th. Sale will begin at 9 o'clock in the morning and continue all day. An opportunity is thus afforded all residents of and nearby Bellefonte to aid the nurses. Contributions will also be welcomed. The nurses are not making a canvass of the town for contributions, but will be glad to receive the same.

Lightning Played Antics.

During a severe electric storm that passed over Lock Haven last Sunday afternoon, a bolt of lightning passed down the chimney of the home of William E. Fisher, in Allison township. The lightning confined its operations to the top of the kitchen range, playing antics with cooking utensils and knocking them to the floor. Holes were punctured in various aluminum articles. Nine persons were in the kitchen at the time, but none was injured, although all were stunned more or less.

Snook—Gummo.

Miss Georgianna Barbara Gummo, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Gummo, of Mackeyville, and Clyde Snook, of Parvin, were married on Sunday, September 5th, at Hagerstown, They will reside at the groom's home at Parvin.

MANY AUTO ACCIDENTS REPORTED IN FEW DAYS

Man Killed While Driving Home from State College

SEVERAL ARE INJURED

Son-in-Law of Former Sheriff Woodring Has Leg Crushed When Car Plunges Over High Embankment—Numerous Minor Accidents.

An unusually large number of automobile accidents have occurred in the last week, some of them being of a most serious character. One person was killed and a number of others painfully injured.

Morton Singheiser and little son, Ray, of Renovo, were painfully injured in an automobile accident last Sunday afternoon. They were in a Ford car with several others when the machine went over a 150 foot precipice, the last 50 feet of which was a sheer drop to the railroad tracks. Mr. Singheiser is the husband of Adeline Woodring, a daughter of former Sheriff Woodring, of Bellefonte, and has frequently visited here.

Berlie Bottorf, of Flemington, and Miles Bottorf and his son, Reuben, of Renovo, also were in the car when it leaped over the high precipice. Mr. Singheiser sustained a crushed leg from knee to hip, the bones being so badly fractured that they protruded through the flesh. His son, Ray, sustained a fractured leg and a painful scalp wound. Berlie Bottorf had his nose broken and a gash inflicted on his leg that required seven stitches to close. Miles Bottorf had a scalp wound that required four stitches. His son, Reuben, sustained minor scalp wounds.

During Sunday afternoon the party started from Renovo to go to Westport. When between the latter place and Shintown the gear broke and the car shot over the steep embankment. The impetus of the falling machine was so great that when it reached the point where the embankment makes a sheer drop of 50 feet the car plunged out into the air, cleared telegraph and telephone wires and landed on the railroad tracks below. It seemed almost a miracle that all five persons were not killed. Mr. Singheiser and Reuben Bottorf remained in the car until it dropped to the railroad tracks, but the three other occupants were spilled out as the machine rolled over and over. The injured persons were taken to Renovo on a freight train.

George R. Stewart, a prominent farmer living near Mechanicsburg, Indiana County, was killed, and his wife slightly injured Monday afternoon, when their automobile overturned while descending a steep hill on the State road near Ebensburg. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart were enroute to their home from State College, where they had just taken their son to have him entered as a student. Mrs. Stewart was learning to drive the car. She lost control of the machine when she endeavored to throw on the brakes at the hill. Stewart was pinned underneath the machine. Mrs. Stewart managed to crawl from the wreckage and tried for some time to pull her husband from underneath the car. A passing automobile conveyed the victims to Ebensburg. The body was turned over to an undertaker and was later shipped to the late home in Mechanicsburg. Mrs. Stewart was prostrated.

Henry C. Quigley, candidate for Judge, was driving his Buick runabout near Blanchard last Sunday afternoon when the machine skidded off the road and upset. A heavy shower earlier in the afternoon had caused the road to be quite muddy. The car had no chains on the tires and while going down the steep Schenck hill, midway between Howard and Blanchard, the accident happened. In the car with Mr. Quigley were Mrs. Quigley and his brother-in-law, Dr. William D. Horne, of Yonkers, N. Y. The car skidded into a ditch and then turned over upon its side toward the center of the road. The three occupants escaped without injury and the car was damaged only to the extent of a slightly bent front axle. The car was righted by Louis Bolapue and several others who happened to drive along and the Quigley party were soon able to resume their journey.

A young man named Nestlerode, from Orviston, with a Miss Weaver, from Lock Haven, met with an accident while driving a car at a point about one-half mile above Howard. This mishap occurred shortly before noon on Sunday. There is a fine stretch of modern road at that point, built by the Pennsylvania Railroad when it double-tracked the Bald Eagle valley branch through the Howard section. This stretch of road tempts motorists to speed up, although with considerable danger to those who do not know that at the termination of the modern piece of road there is a slight curve and a descent to a rough dirt road. The Nestlerode car speeded over the smooth road and at the curve seemed to be beyond control of the driver. The machine went off the road with such force that the front axle was broken and both front wheels knocked off. A passing automobile conveyed Mr. Nestlerode and Miss Weaver to Mt. Eagle and they returned home Sunday evening.

William Emery, of Philipsburg, was speeding his car on the same stretch of smooth road one day last week and being unable to make the turn plowed through a barbed wire fence. One of the strands of wire caught Mr. Emery on the face and cut a gash in his chin. His injuries were dressed at the Bellefonte hospital.

While driving through Centre Hall on Tuesday the driver of a car lost control and his machine collided with a buggy. No one was injured, but the buggy was damaged considerably.

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Fetterhoff were out in their new Ford car last Sunday and while near Julian the machine skidded and slid over an embankment and into a corn field. Neither was injured, although both were naturally considerably frightened. Some passing automobilists aided in towing the Fetterhoff car back onto the road.

ATTEMPTED HOLD-UP

Calvin Smith Says Man Demanded Money at Point of Gun.

While walking along East Linn Street, a short distance from the home of his father, Register Frank Smith, Calvin Smith alleges that he was held up at the point of a revolver by a stranger who demanded his watch and money. Mr. Smith says that instead of complying with the demand he threw up one arm and knocked the revolver from his assailant's hand and then struck him a blow which hurled him to the ground. In the darkness he says he was unable to see where the revolver had fallen and rather than take any further chances with his assailant he started home. No trace of the unknown man was found by the police who investigated the case as best they could once they had learned the particulars.

According to Mr. Smith the attempted hold-up occurred near a clump of shrubbery nearby the lawn at the A. G. Morris residence, just beyond the Lutheran church parsonage. Mr. Smith had been out for an automobile drive and did not return to town until about 3 o'clock Friday morning. He immediately started to walk home and had reached the point indicated when a tall, heavily-built stranger suddenly emerged from behind the shrubbery and stepped toward him with a gun. Mr. Smith says that he made no outcry because everything happened so quickly that it never occurred to him to call for help.

WEATHER MAN KIND TO GRANGERS AT PICNIC

Grounds in Splendid Shape for Big Annual Outing.

GREAT CROWD ON HAND

Large Number of Tent Holders and Elaborate Display of Farm Machinery and Agricultural and Horticultural Exhibits.

With favorable weather prevailing and the attendance gratifyingly large, the annual grangers' picnic at Centre Hall is being held this week. As a rule the week for this big annual event for the farmers of Centre County is marked by cold weather, but this year the reverse is the case and the opening days at the early part of the week were oppressively hot. However, everybody who has been so fortunate as to attend has been rewarded with a good time and in all respects, in fact, the event has been a pleasing success. As usual, Thursday (today) is the big day of the week.

The number of persons occupying tents is larger than at any time in the past, while the standard of exhibits of agricultural and horticultural specimens and also of farm implements is exceptionally high. The picnic crowd has afforded a tempting field of operations for the numerous political candidates and the latter have been on hand daily, distributing cards and urging upon voters the importance of attending next Tuesday's primaries.

The addresses by visiting speakers have been unusually good, and the same has been true of the evening entertainments. The speakers have included "Farmer" William T. Creasy, past master of the State Grange and a familiar figure at grangers' picnics for many years.

The picnic grounds were in splendid condition all week and there was an absence of the heavy dust that inconvenienced visitors at last year's outing. To prevent a repetition of last year's difficulties in this respect, automobiles were excluded from the picnic grounds unless traveling on business missions. Thousands of persons drove machines to the picnic but so far as known not a serious accident happened to mar the week's festivities The list of tent-holders at the picnic follows:

Suggestions for Girls Leaving for the City.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 11, 1915.

To the readers of the "The Republican"

Is it possible that any young girl from your home is coming to Pittsburgh to study or work this winter?

Has she found a respectable and reasonable place, suitable for her home?

Does she know how she is going to make her living?

The Young Women's Christian Association of Pittsburgh can answer each one of these questions and many more that are needful to girls. Rooms are provided where they may live in the Y. W. C. A. buildings, or girls will be directed to good boarding homes. Come to the Association for two or three days, or until you can find some comfortable place to stay. A warm welcome awaits all girls.

The aim of all Young Women's Christian Association work is to protect young girls. To give them a clean, healthful, suitable place to live; to provide a palatable table, of good plain food, suited to their needs; to surround this home with congenial company and a home-like feeling; to give a girl what she needs for the amount she is able to pay.

Pittsburgh Young Women's Christian Association provides this for from $3.50 to $6.50 a week; for room and board. At most of the stations in all large cities you will find a Y. W. C. A. representative or a Traveler's Aid Worker always ready to help and direct girls. She will tell you how to find the Y. W. C. A. Building in any city which provides a place of safety and comfort for girls traveling alone. Stop over with them as you go from city to city. Each Association has a little pamphlet "directory" they will give you, telling you just where to find the building in each city. Prices average from fifty cents to one dollar a night, meals a la carte generally.

The object of Young Women's Christian Association work is to improve the physical, mental, social and spiritual life of all girls. This is done through the gymnasium and swimming pool in the winter, and tennis, walks, etc., in the summer.

The mental uplift is provided by classes in English, French, German, Spelling Arithmetic, Stenography, Typewriting and many other classes, besides many lectures on different subjects.

The social side provides good company, congenial companions, to strangers, many concerts and pleasant entertainments; the library where books may be taken home; magazines and newspapers read; rest rooms for a quiet time; pianos provided where girls may practice, or for a more lively time, a place where all may sing, and all kinds of clubs.

The spiritual side is the underlying motive for all Y. W. C. A. work, but it is not forced upon any one. Every Asssociation worker meets for their time of prayer, before the day's work begins. Bible classes are provided for young and old in the Old and New Testament. Sunday afternoon or evening services are held in many Association buildings, after which an acquaintance hour is provided where girls may come that are strangers, or the city girl living in poor boarding homes may bring her Sunday beau and have the use of the parlors. Often Sunday evening tea is provided.

In Pittsburgh sixty-three per cent of the girls using the Y. W. C. A. Building (as a man uses his club-house) or living under its roof, are from outlying districts, and the support of the work is taken care of by Pittsburgh women. Last year $101,839.28 was spent in taking care of the work needed for girls.

Many girls leave their homes and come to a big city to get work but they find work is not as plentiful as they expected and before they realize it their funds are gone, and they have no way to support themselves. From January to June, 1915 of 626 girls who applied for positions almost every one depended upon the Association until some work could be secured.

Six hundred girls learned to make their own clothes last winter in the sewing and dressmading department, and one hundred forty-two had special lessons in cooking in the domestic science department. Seven hundred and thirty-nine girls took swimming lessons, some "life-saving" examinations, while 10,687 girls enjoyed the swimming pool.

There were sixty regular boarders in the Association Building during the year 1914, and 1921 girls were accommodated as transients staying from a few days to a few weeks.

In the Association restaurant many girls take advantage of the meals, which are just about half the price paid at a regular restaurant, and have a nice lunch for twenty cents, or dinner from twenty to thirty-five cents, besides congenial company and all the advantages of the building.

The work done for charity by the Association differs from the regular "Associated Charities" or organizations where food or clothing is given directly to those in need, for most of the work to the needy is done very silently. Many girls from good families living in the country are temporarily in need of assistance; to these the Association holds out a helping hand.

But, you say, where does the money come from to support the work? How is it financed? The Association has three hundred ninety-five volunteer workers, who not only do most of the work, but a committee of Pittsburgh women supply the money by asking for contributions. This year finances have been unusually hard for philanthropic work, for many persons have been compelled to cut their contributions.

A gift from any one or from every one interested in work for girls would be greatly appreciated, for the greater part of the work is not for the city girl, but for the stranger in the city, with no home or no friends.

Very truly,

ALICE B. LATHROP

General Secretary of the Central Young Women's Christian Association,

59 Chatham Street,

Pittsburgh, Pa.

College Athletics.

Many a boy and girl entering college dream not alone of success as students, but are anxious to gain recognition for athletic achievements.

To warn the young is like casting water on burning oil and yet it were well for the students who contemplate severe training to seriously consider as far as possible their probable occupation through life and if it is to be sedentary they should refrain from hard competitive athletics which will develop the muscles to a degree that cannot be kept up by the successful lawyer, doctor, teacher, or the majority of those engaged in business.

Over-training in youth is almost certain to result in physical deterioration in after years, says State Health Commissioner Dixon. The full value of athletics is obtained by the individuals who achieves a rational all-around development. Such a training is far more apt to stimulate one in after life to continue those athletic exercises which are available to the business and professional man or woman.

No occupation should prevent the student or the professional man from taking a reasonable amount of out-door exercise daily. If nothing else a good swinging walk, say five to ten miles a day in the open air will always prove beneficial not only during youth but to a less degree in old age.

The young woman who goes in for athletics should be particularly careful. If indulged in to a reasonable extent under the supervision of a properly trained director of athletics, exercises and sports of a not too violent character will be a benefit.

Over-exertion is apt to incur a serious penalty with either sex but is perhaps more harmful for women than men.

The fact should be kept in mind that exercise is a means to an end and properly indulged in it should stimulate the body and re-act healthily on the process of the brain.

For the college man or women this is the practical side of athletics and the one which should be kept in mind.

One way to relieve habitual constipation is to take regularly a mild laxative. Doan's Regulets are recommmended for this purpose. 25c a box at all drug stores.

Engineer Meets Death.

William Hevner, of Clearfield, formerly of Philipsburg, an engineer on the Beech Creek division of the N. Y. C. R. R., running between Clearfield and Jersey Shore, met a sad death on Sunday morning of last week. He was making a return trip from Jersey Shore with empties, and at Cataract was running into a siding to allow another train to pass. While his train was yet in motion he walked out on the running board and stepped onto the pilot to see if he could discover the reason for a peculiar noise he heard about the engine. In some way he missed his footing and fell on the track in front of the engine, which passed over him, together with 65 cars, killing him instantly, severing his head and greatly mangling his body.

Deceased was aged about 40 years. He is survived by his wife and two sons; his father and sister, residing at Nant-y-Glo, two brothers at Pittsburgh and one at Cherry Tree.

No, J. Kennedy Johnston candidate for the office of judge does not claim perfection, never has and never will. If he could suit his enemies who are ignoring the people for their own selfish purposes, they (his enemies) would consider him perfect.—ADV.

Purchased Big Timber Tract.

The Huyett-McNitt Lumber Co. recently purchased a 5000-acre timber tract at Beaver Dam creek, about eight miles south of Hollidaysburg, Blair County, and next spring will begin operations on the same. It is said that the new owners figure it will require about eight years to cut the timber. The company has about completed cutting timber on the big tract near Waddle, which extended over a period of years and gave employment to a large number of men. The Blair County tract was purchased from the Harbison-Walker Refractories Co., of Pittsburgh. It is estimated that upward of 25,000,000 feet of lumber will be cut. The Huyett-McNitt Co. have demonstrated their hustling ability in handling a number of large operations. E. M. Huyett, of Centre Hall, is one of the firm. Another is A. R. McNitt, of this place, who makes his headquarters at the Bush House.

ELIJAH'S WORK BEFORE ASCENSION

1 Kings 20:1-21.—September 19.

Defeats Through Drunkenness—Syria's King Wars With Israel—Confident of Victory, He Celebrates It In Advance. Israel's Small Army Under Divine Command Defeats the Syrians With Terrible Slaughter—Why God Permits Wars, Calamities, Etc.—Should Christians Engage In War?

OUR lesson recounts the attack of the Syrians upon the Israelites, whose capital city, Samaria, is besieged and its king in fear of the necessity of capitulation. The Syrian King boastfully tells what he will do, and commands a surrender. King Ahab, perplexed, considers resistance useless, until the Lord's message revived his courage, directing him to proceed with the battle. A great victory for the Israelites was gained—partly because the Syrian king was very drunk, and many of his lords with him.

All the wars of the past, however, pale into insignificance before the present great struggle in Europe. The rapidity with which modern guns are fired and the terrible slaughter accomplished are appalling. Authentic reports declare that twelve millions have already been killed, wounded or made prisoners; and we may safely assume that the armies now contending number ten millions. The Scriptures seem to declare that this terrible war will bring no great victory to any of the contestants, but that eventually all the nations thus engaged will be terribly weakened, not only in loss of able manhood, but also financially.

King Ahab.

It is a sad reflection upon our boasted civilization that such a war should be considered the only way by which the great nations could come to an agreement on matters of mutual interest respecting an earth which God has given to the children of men as their common heritage. When we reflect that the warring nations claim to be Christian, the thought is all the more horrible. Our only comfort is in the thought that the poor deluded people do not understand the meaning of the term Christian, and that the great mass of them never were Christians. True Christians no doubt are to be found in all the armies of the countries where conscription is law, and are endeavoring to show forth the Lord's praises, even under such terrible conditions.

Surely mankind are awakening to a realization of the fact that the boasted four hundred million Christians are for the most part as far from God and from Christian ideals as are the twelve hundred million heathens! Their awakening should help them to realize what the true Church is, and that her mission is not to convert the world, but to prepare herself to become "the Bride, the Lamb's Wife." If the war should teach this lesson to any considerable number, it will not have been in vain.

Why God Permits War.

God's penalty upon our race is death—come how it may. For six thousand years the penalty has been in operation, and the entire race is going down to the tomb under that sentence, "Dying, thou shalt die." The hope for all is in Christ and through His death—by the resurrection of the dead, which He will accomplish during the Millennium. His faithful Church will be the first resurrected, and to a plane of glory, honor and immortality. The remainder of the world will come forth, "every man in his own order," as the Bible declares.—1 Corinthians 15:21-25.

Meantime, from the Divine viewpoint, all mankind are falling asleep in death, to await their awakening in Messiah's Kingdom and the beginning then of the grand opportunity which our Lord has secured for all, whereby they may escape from sin and death. The Divine promises and provision are that under Messiah's Kingdom wars and all other calamities will be made to cease forever. Speaking of the effect of His Millennial Kingdom, our Lord declares that the curse will be rolled away; and that God's blessing will come instead, until there shall be no more sighing, dying, crying or pain. Thenceforth every sinful thought, word and act will receive punishment; while every good thought, word and act will surely receive a blessing.—Acts 3:19-23; Isaiah 26:9.

The Princes of Israel.

Some have asked, "Does God give special direction to His spirit-begotten children respecting war, or are they in this matter subject to the powers that be?" We reply that all His people are soldiers of the Cross, and that the Apostle forewarned us that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal. (2 Corinthians 10:4.) Nowhere in the Bible are God's consecrated people commissioned to fight, to kill, to take from others either life or property. The present great war is merely a demonstration that if any considerable number of those participating in it ever were Christians, they have been merely "babes in Christ," and did not understand the teachings of the Lord. All thinking people should see that it is a commercial war, for gain or for supremacy upon the seas.

The debt of any county, city, borough, township, school district, or other municipality or incorporated district, except as herein provided, shall never exceed seven per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property therein, nor shall any such municipality or district incur any new debt, or increase its indebtedness to an amount exceeding two per centum upon such assessed valuation of property, without the assent of the electors thereof at a public election in such manner as shall be provided by law; but any city, the debt of which now exceeds seven per centum of such assessed valuation, may be authorized by law to increase the same three per centum, in the aggregate, at any one time, upon such valuation, except that any debt or debts hereinafter incurred by the city and county of Philadelphia for the construction and development of subways for transit purposes, or for the construction of wharves and docks, or the reclamation of land to be used in the construction of a system of wharves and docks, as public improvements, owned or to be owned by said city and county of Philadelphia, and which shall yield to the city and county of Philadelphia current net revenues in excess of the interest on said debt or debts, and the annual installments necessary for the cancellation of said debt or debts, may be excluded in ascertaining the power of the city and county of Philadelphia to become otherwise indebted: Provided, That a sinking-fund for their cancellation shall be established and maintained," so that it shall read as follows:—

Section 8. The debt of any county, city, borough, township, school district, or other municipality or incorporated district, except as herein provided, shall never exceed seven per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property therein, nor shall any such municipality or district incur any new debt, or increase its indebtedness to an amount exceeding two per centum upon such assessed valuation of property, without the consent of the electors thereof at a public election in such manner as shall be provided by law; but any city, the debt of which on the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four, exceeded seven per centum of such assessed valuation, and has not since been reduced to less than such per centum, may be authorized by law to increase the same three per centum in the aggregate, at any one time, upon such valuation. The city of Philadelphia, upon the conditions hereinafter set forth, may increase its indebtedness to the extent of three per centum in excess of seven per centum upon such assessed valuation for the specific purpose of providing for all or any of the following purposes,—to wit: For the construction and improvement of subways, tunnels, railways, elevated railways, and other transit facilities; for the construction and improvement of wharves and docks and for the reclamation of land to be used in the construction of wharves and docks, owned or to be owned by said city. Such increase, however, shall only be made with the assent of the electors thereof at a public election, to be held in such manner as shall be provided by law. In ascertaining the borrowing capacity of said city of Philadelphia, at any time, there shall be excluded from the calculation a credit, where the work resulting from any previous expenditure, for any one or more of the specific purposes hereinabove enumerated shall be yielding to said city an annual current net revenue; the amount of which credit shall be ascertained by capitalizing the annual net revenue during the year immediately preceding the time of such ascertainment. Such capitalization shall be accomplished by ascertaining the principal amount which would yield such annual, current net revenue, at the average rate of interest, and sinking-fund charges payable upon the indebtedness incurred by said city for such purposes, up to the time of such ascertainment. The method of determining such amount, so to be excluded or allowed as a credit, may be prescribed by the General Assembly.

In incurring indebtedness, for any one, or more of said purposes of construction, improvement, or reclamation, the city of Philadelphia may issue its obligations maturing not later than fifty years from the date thereof, with provision for a sinking-fund sufficient to retire said obligation at maturity, the payments to such sinking-fund to be in equal or graded annual instalments. Such obligations may be in an amount sufficient to provide for and may include the amount of the interest and sinking-fund charges accruing and which may accrue thereon throughout the period of construction and until the expiration of one year after the completion of the work for which said indebtedness shall have been incurred; and said city shall not be required to levy a tax to pay said interest and sinking-fund charges, as required by section ten of article nine of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, until the expiration of said period of one year after the completion of such work.

No act shall prescribe any limitations of time within which suits may be brought against corporations for injuries to persons or property, or for other causes different from those fixed by general law; regulating actions against natural persons, and such acts now existing are avoided," so that it shall read as follows:

A JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of this Commonwealth in accordance with provisions of the eighteenth (XVIII) article thereof.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That the following is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the eighteenth (XVIII) article thereof:—

Laws may be passed providing for a system of registering, transferring, insuring of and guaranteeing land titles by the State, or by the counties thereof, and for settling and determining adverse or other claims to and interest in lands the titles to which are so registered, transferred, insured, and guaranteed; and for the creation and collection of indemnity funds; and for carrying the system and powers hereby provided for into effect by such existing courts as may be designated by the Legislature, and by the establishment of such new courts as may be deemed necessary. In matters arising in and under the operation of such system, judicial powers, with right of appeal, may be conferred by the Legislature upon county recorders and upon other officers by it designated. Such laws may provide for continuing the registering, transferring, insuring, and guaranteeing such titles after the first or original registration has been perfected by the court, and provision may be made for raising the necessary funds for expenses and salaries of officers, which shall be paid out of the treasury of the several counties.

SENTRIES FOR CHURCHES.

A Custom Forced by Native Feuds In the Melanesian Islands.

In the Melanesian islands the natives carry on feuds with a more relentless hatred even than the vendettistes of Corsica. In these islands Christianity has been made, at least in outward aspect, the religion of the people.

That it really does mean something to the Melanesian is evidenced by the reply I received from an intelligent old chief when I asked him why he did not become a Christian.

"I'm to be," he said, "when I kill the devil who kill my boy five years ago."

So relentlessly are these feuds carried on that it is the custom for a native of wealth with a grievance against another, but who finds it impossible or inexpedient to kill his enemy and secure his head himself, to hire a professional murderer and pay him upon the delivery of the head.

Often in the years that are just gone indiscriminate killing went on with such savage persistence that even during church service "pot shots" were taken at marked worshipers through the doors and windows.

The situation became so acute in one village that the government was petitioned, and the response was the loan to the missionary of a rifle.

The missionary took the hint and armed one of his natives who stood guard outside the church during services.

And so it became the fashion on many of the islands to add a sentry to the church rolls.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

How a Coal Fire Protects Itself.

A curious way in which a fire in the heart of a coal pile keeps itself from being put out is noted in a mining journal. Such fires often start in the interior of large piles of coal owing to heat developed by slow oxidation, which is prevented by the size of the pile from escaping into the air. Such fires are difficult to put out owing to the fact that the burning mass turns the coal around it into coke, which is nearly impervious to water. The pile may thus be thoroughly drenched without putting out the fire, which it never really reaches. The only way to deal with the situation is to drive into the pile a sharpened iron pipe long enough to reach the burning coal and then to couple a hose to the upper end and turn on the water.

Its Class.

"Is this a first class postoffice?" inquired the stranger.

"It's as good as you'll find in these parts," retorted the native, with justifiable local pride.—Buffalo Express.

PEACE RUMORS

Either one of two possible motives is put forward as the reason for Germany's attempt at this time to start a discussion of peace. One is that it has reached the zenith of its military success, that it cannot hope for further victories on a large scale and that another summer will see the balance of strength decidedly on the side of its enemies.

The other is that it holds Russia practically at its mercy, believes that Russia can be eliminated and that German armies can triumph, but is unwilling to carry the slaughter farther unless the Allies insist upon fighting to a decision. In either case it is plain that peace must depend upon the Allies, and it should be equally plain that peace will be determined—either now or later—by the military situation that means that peace depends upon Russia. If the Czar gives up, the Allies cannot win. If Russia is not conquered, and finds a line it can hold somewhere within its boundaries, the Allies will probably fight it out. The diplomats may bring on war, but the generals must make peace.

EAST INDIAN IDOLS.

Some That Are Guarded and Saluted by British Troops.

In India a British guard of honor presents arms to a stone tiger every day. The tiger is regarded by the natives as a god who drives away all danger and calamity, and once some soldiers, in a spirit of mischief, overthrew the image from its resting place and sent it rolling into the valley below.

So shocked and scandalized were the natives that a revolt seemed imminent, and Lord Combermere quieted the outraged natives by restoring the image to its pedestal and ordering the regiment to salute it in full view of all. Since that time a British troop has kept watch over the tiger idol day by day.

Another Indian idol which is watched over by the British is the god whose name is Kluk Kluk, equivalent to "Lord of Lords," which is supposed to be asleep for 6,000 years and whose awakening will be the end of all things.

Hence the natives of the city of Pegu, in Burma, are terribly afraid that some one will arouse the god, so the British government, to avert trouble, stationed a sentry there to prevent this catastrophe.

Once a year a strange custom is observed in Cairo. A piece of carpet on which, according to tradition, Mahomet once sat and which is the most famous sacred relic of Islam, is carried through the streets, and the khedive and his troops all receive it in review order and salute it as they pass.

The relic is guarded most carefully at ordinary times, and the officer in charge of it each morning must salute it with his sword raised, while the bugler blows three blasts before it.—Exchange.

OLD TIME BATTLES.

They Were Mere Skirmishes When Compared With Modern War.

In the light of modern warfare the old time battles shrink to the proportions of ordinary street brawls. The opposing armies were usually arrayed in lines within hearing of one another. Frequently the actual combat was preluded by an exchange of opprobrious profanity in order to get up the proper sentiment of "holy wrath," which was considered an indispensable element in a soldier's efficiency.

Alexander the Great conquered the orient with only 35,000 men. On a still smaller scale the great battles of Israel appear to have been conducted, as told in the Bible accounts. For instance, in the fight against Gideon the Israelites are said to have suffered severe losses—to wit, thirty men.

The Egyptian army which invaded Palestine and subjugated the whole country counted barely 5,000 soldiers. Saul confronted his Palestine adversaries with an "army" of 600, which in the course of time was increased to 1,000, after the "militarists" of those days had persuaded the authorities to provide a reserve force, a sort of "landsturm," of 400 warriors brave and bold.

King David's military establishment did not exceed his predecessor's in numbers. According to the first book of Kings, however, King Ahab must have been pretty much of a war lord, judging by the standard of olden times. In his army were 7,000 soldiers and a constabulary force of 230 men.—Argonaut.

EASY COFFEE GROWING.

The Plant Flourishes With Little or No Attention In Haiti.

Coffee, the great staple product of Haiti, the West Indian island, grows with little attention. It supplies the bulk of the revenues of the government, together with the meager demands of the simple peasantry of the mountains and valleys whose business it is, especially the women and children, to gather it and bring it to the seaport towns on their heads and on the backs of donkeys and horses.

This plant is seen on nearly all the uplands and mountain sides of the country, and as the product is easily portable it is brought to market from far and near in all conceivable quantities, from one or two pounds up to 200 pounds, accordingly as it is carried on the head of a child, the back of a horse or in sacks in ox carts.

Notwithstanding that the coffee plant is scarcely cultivated at all it goes on reproducing itself from fallen berries so successfully that the crop only varies from year to year through extraneous influences like a variation in the rainfall—the lack of or too abundant rain near or during the flowering season.—London Telegraph.

Fortifications of New York Harbor.

The narrow approaches to the harbor of New York have made the fortification of it a simpler matter than usual. On Sandy Hook is Fort Hancock, with an artillery garrison; on the Narrows, Fort Wadsworth, artillery garrison; on the Staten Island side, Fort Tompkins; across the Narrows, Fort Hamilton. The older Fort Lafayette, between Forts Hamilton and Wadsworth, is now used as a storehouse. On Governors island are Fort Jay, infantry, important barracks and the New York arsenal of the ordnance department. Castle Williams is now a military prison. Fort Totten, artillery post, is on Willet's Point, and directly across from this battery is Fort Schuyler. On Sandy Hook is the proving ground of the ordnance department. A signal corps is stationed at Fort Wood, Bedloe's island.—New York Times.

Information Wanted.

Will some one please give a hint in regard to the whereabouts and the welfare of the family? This honored institution began to disappear a generation or so ago, just about the time that the dissipation of inconveniences attendant upon the rearing of children made families feasible. Ever since the passing away of one room log cabins, abject poverty, home grown wearing apparel and common sense the family has been losing weight and numbers. Its recent complete withdrawal from society has caused grave concern among those who favor the further propagation of the species. If the family will kindly come back and re-establish itself among the race of men no questions will be asked and none answered.—Judge.

GEN. B. F. FISHER DEAD

Gallant Old Soldier—Escaped from Libby Prison During Civil War.

General Benjamin F. Fisher, a gallant old veteran of the Civil war and a native of Centre County, died at his late home at Philadelphia on Thursday of last week. At the time of his death he was aged 82 years. He was born at Boalsburg and was well known and universally admired throughout the county.

During the Civil war General Fisher was among the thousands of Union soldiers captured by Confederates and lodged in Libby prison. He was one of the number who made their escape by crawling through a tunnel, the digging of which had been done at night and had covered a period of many months. Some of those to escape were re-captured and returned to Libby prison, but General Fisher was among the fortunate ones to reach the Union lines in safety. The story of his escape, as related by him, has been an interesting feature at various Centre County reunions in Philadelphia.

General Fisher was a genial, whole-souled man and one who made many warm friendships. His passing away marks the removal of a picturesque figure and his memory will long be held in the highest esteem for what he was as a man and for the service he rendered his country in the hour of need.

Condensary Picnic At Hecla Park.

In order to establish a better understanding between the persons interested in the Continental Condensed Milk Company of Mill Hall, Penn'a., and the farmers and residents of Clinton and Centre Counties, and so that there may be opportunity to meet and discuss those things of mutual interest, there will be an all day basket picnic at Hecla Park on Thursday, September 23d, 1915. Arrangements have been made for addresses and talks by men representing the Federal and State Government, and prominent men from other sections and communities where milk condensing plants are being successfully operated. These addresses will be of great advantage and the names of the speakers, and subjects will be announced later.

It is hoped there will be a large attendance of the farmers and residents of Clinton and Centre Counties, as there will be no effort spared to make the occasion a most pleasant and successful one, and it is believed that the exchange of ideas will be of mutual advantage and work to the interests of the communities in Clinton and Centre Counties and the farmers and residents thereof.

S. S. CONVENTION

Erie to Entertain Delegates at Annual Meeting Oct. 5—8.

For fifty-three years the Sunday Schools of Pennsylvania have been participating in a great yearly convention. This annual gathering has been growing in influence and power until now it has a platform that takes in all the Protestant Evangelical Sunday Schools.

The great evangelistic wave which swept over Pennsylvania during the past year has added thousands to the churches and also to the Sunday Schools. More people go to Sunday School in Pennsylvania than in any other state in the Union. Big business men and men of all professional callings are turning to the Sunday School and giving it their endorsement by becoming members of Organized Adult Bible Classes.

The Convention at Erie, scheduled for October 5,6,7,8, promises to bring together Sunday School representatives from every County in the State. A great Peace Meeting, with Hon. P. C. Knox, Ex-Secretary of State, as the principal speaker, is a feature of the program.

Thursday, October 7, will be O. A. B. C. day. This day will bring out large delegations of Adult Bible Class men and women. A street demonstration on wheels, calling for the use of 1000 automobiles, will be a unique event. The whole program is rich with talent of national and international reputation.

Centre County is entitled to 30 delegates. Application for delegate credential cards should be made to Darius Waite Bellefonte, who is the Corresponding Secretary for the Centre County Sunday School Association.

The railroads are granting reduced round trip rates for this great meeting.

Harry S. Stuart A Worthy Candidate

[From the Philipsburg Journal]

The primaries will occur on Tuesday, September 21, and the Republicans of Centre County will do well not to overlook the candidacy of Harry S. Stuart, of Sandy Ridge, for the office of County Commissioner, who is worthy of special consideration and would fill this very important office most creditably.

Mr. Stuart comes from one of the oldest families in Centre County and always identified with its best interests. His grandfather was a Scotch Presbyterian minister, who settled in this county in 1800. His father, David A. Stuart, was born at Linden Hall in 1813. He had three sons, Harry, the youngest, being the only one now living. The father and two sons were soldiers in the Civil War, fighting in the defense of our country's flag, while Harry, 11 years of age, remained at home with his mother and helped her in the burdens and cares of life during their absence at the front.

Harry received his education in the old academy at Boalsburg, where he was born and spent his early life. He has been a resident of Philipsburg and Sandy Ridge for over thirty years, and has always enjoyed the confidence and the highest regard of the people of this entire community. He has always been an ardent Republican, following in the steps of his father, who was throughout his life an active member of the same party. Harry's activity in behalf of the party has been such that he never has spared time nor money to help along its interests. Under the old system he rarely ever missed a county convention as a delegate or interested spectator.

His family have been paying taxes in the county for 115 years, and none have ever held a county office. Harry has for years been active in the mercantile business, and if chosen as a member of the Board of County Commissioners would bring business principles into the office.—Advertisement.

The Romance of Elaine

Sequel to The Exploits of Elaine

A Detective Novel and a Motion Picture Drama

SYNOPSIS.

After the finding of Wu Fang's body and Kennedy's disappearance, a submarine appears the following morning on the bay. A man plunges overboard from it and swims ashore. It is the entrance of Marcius Del Mar into America.

His mission is to obtain information of Kennedy and recover, if possible, the lost torpedo. At the Dodge home he soon wins the confidence of Elaine. Later she is warned by a little old man to be careful of Del Mar. This warning came just in time to prevent Del Mar from carrying out his plans.

Later Elaine gives a masquerade ball. Del Mar attends. Neither he nor his domino girl can locate the torpedo. A gray friar warns Elaine and Jameson of Del Mar's purpose, and his plans are upset. Del Mar succeeds in getting this girl in Elaine's home as a maid. She finds the torpedo in the attic, places it in a trunk, which with others is sent to Elaine's country home. A holdup on the train takes place. Del Mar's men carry the trunk away, only to find on opening it that they have the wrong trunk.

Upon Elaine's arrival in the country she again encounters the old man of mystery. He warns her to do her own unpacking. She does, and finds the long-lost torpedo, which she places in a dresser drawer. Del Mar's men enter her room during her absence and escape with the torpedo. They are seen by the old man, who follows them. A desperate battle follows in which the old man destroys the torpedo. That afternoon as Elaine and Jameson are riding through the country Del Mar plans to blow up a bridge at a time when they are crossing. He would have succeeded but the old man unexpectedly appears and delays the explosion just long enough to permit Elaine's car to cross safely.

TWENTY-EIGHTH EPISODE

THE CAVE IN THE CLIFF.

It was not long after the almost miraculous escape of Elaine and myself from the blowing up of the bridge on the shore road that Del Mar returned from his mysterious mission which had, apparently, taken him actually down to the bottom of the sea.

The panel in the wall of his library opened and in the still dripping submarine suit, holding under his arm the weird helmet, Del Mar entered. No sooner had he begun to remove his wet diving suit than the man who had signaled with the heliograph that we had found Del Mar's message from "below," whatever that might mean, entered the house and was announced by the valet.

"Let him come in immediately," ordered Del Mar, placing his suit in a closet. Then to the man, as he entered the room, he said: "Well, what's new?"

"Quite a bit," returned the man, frowning still over Elaine's accidental discovery of the under-water communication. "The Dodge girl happened to pick up one of the tubes with a message just after you went down. I tried to get her by blowing up one of the bridges, but it didn't work, somehow."

"We'll have to silence her," remarked Del Mar angrily with a sinister frown. "You stay here and wait for orders."

A moment later he made his way down to a private dock on his grounds and jumped aboard a trim little speed boat moored there. He started the motor and off the boat feathered in a cloud of spray.

It was only a moment by water before he reached the Dodge dock. There he tied his boat and hurried up the dock.

* * *

Elaine and I arrived home without any further experiences after our hairbreadth escape from the explosion at the bridge.

We were in doubt at first, however, just what to do about the mysterious message which we had picked up in the harbor.

"Really, Walter," remarked Elaine, after we had considered the matter for some time, "I think we ought to send that message to the government at Washington. It may be of great importance."

Already she had seated herself at her desk and began to write, while I examined the metal tube and the note again.

"There," she said at length, handing me the note she had written, "how does that sound?"

I read it while she addressed the envelope. "Very good," I replied, handing it back.

She folded it and shoved it into the envelope on which she had written:

"Chief,
"Secret Service,
"Washington, D. C."

I was studying the address, wondering whether this was just the thing to do, when Elaine decided the matter by energetically ringing the bell for Jennings.

"Post that, Jennings, please," she directed.

The butler bowed just as the door bell rang. He turned to go.

"Just a minute," I interrupted. "I think perhaps I'd better mail it myself, after all."

He handed me the letter and went out.

"Yes, Walter," agreed Elaine, "that would be better. Please register it, too."

"How do you do?" greeted a suave voice.

It was Del Mar. As he passed me to speak to Elaine, apparently by accident, he knocked the letter from my hand.

"I beg your pardon," he apologized, quickly stooping and picking the missive up.

Though he managed to read the address, he maintained his composure and handed the letter back to me. I started to go out, when Elaine called to me.

"Excuse me just a moment, Mr. Del Mar?" she queried, accompanying me out on the porch.

Already a saddle horse had been brought around for me.

"Perhaps you'd better put a special delivery stamp on it, too, Walter," she added, walking along with me. "And be very careful."

"I will," I promised, as I rode quickly off.

Del Mar, alone, seized the opportunity to go over quietly to the telephone. It was the work of only a moment to call up his bungalow where the emissary who had placed the submarine bell was waiting for orders. Quickly Del Mar whispered his instructions, which the man took, and hung up the receiver.

"I hope you'll pardon me," said Elaine, entering just as Del Mar left the telephone. "Mr. Jameson was going into town and I had a number of little things I wanted him to do. Won't you sit down?"

They chatted for a few moments, but Del Mar did not stay very long. He excused himself shortly and Elaine bade him good-by at the door as he walked off, apparently, down the road I had taken.

* * * * * * *

Del Mar's emissary hurried from the bungalow and almost ran down the road until he came to a spot where two men were hiding.

"Jameson is coming with a letter which the Dodge girl has written to the Secret Service," he cried, pointing excitedly up the road. "You've got to get it, see?"

I was cantering along nicely down the road by the shore, when suddenly, from behind some rocks and bushes, three men leaped out at me. One of them seized the horse's bridle, while the other two quickly dragged me out of the saddle.

It was very unexpected, but I had time enough to draw my gun and fire once. I hit one of the men, too, in the arm, and he staggered back, the blood spurting all over the road.

But before I could fire at the others, they knocked the gun from my hand. Frightened, the horse turned and bolted, riderless.

Together, they dragged me off the road and into the thicket, where I was tied and gagged and laid on the ground, while one of them bound up the wounded arm of the man I had hit. It was not long before one of them began searching me.

"Aha!" he growled, pulling the letter from my pocket and looking at it with satisfaction. "Here it is."

He tore the letter open, throwing the envelope on the ground, and read it.

"There, confound you," he muttered. "The government'll never get that. Come on, men. Bring him this way. Hurry up!"

He shoved the letter into his pocket and led the way through the underbrush, while the others half dragged, half pushed me along. We had not gone very far before one of the three men, who appeared to be the leader, paused.

"Take him to the hang-out," he ordered gruffly. "I'll have to report to the chief."

He disappeared down toward the shore of the harbor while the others prodded me along.

* * * * * * *

Down near the Dodge dock, along the shore, walked a man wearing a broad-brimmed hat and a plain suit of duck. His prim collar and tie comported well with his smoked glasses. Instinctively one would have called him "professor," though whether naturalist, geologist, or plain "bugologist," one would have had difficulty in determining.

He seemed, as a matter of fact, to be a naturalist, for he was engrossed in picking up specimens. But he was not so much engrossed as to fail to hear the approach of footsteps down the gravel walk from Dodge hall to the dock. He looked up in time to see Del Mar coming, and quietly concealed himself in the shrubbery up on the shore.

On the dock, Del Mar stood for some minutes, waiting. Finally, along the shore came another figure. It was the emissary to whom Del Mar had telephoned and who had searched me. The naturalist drew back into his hiding place, peeping out keenly at the two men.

"Well?" demanded Del Mar. "What luck?"

"We've got him," returned the man with brief satisfaction. "Here's the letter she was sending to the Secret Service."

Del Mar seized the note which the man handed to him and read it eagerly. "Good," he exclaimed. "That would have put an end to the whole operations about here. Come on. Get into the boat."

For some reason best known to himself, the naturalist seemed to have lost all interest in his specimens and to have a sudden curiosity about Del Mar's affairs. As the motor boat sped off, he came slowly and curiously out of his hiding place and gazed fixedly at Del Mar.

No sooner had Del Mar's boat got a little distance out into the harbor than the naturalist hurried down the Dodge dock. There was tied Elaine's own fast little runabout. He jumped into it and started the engine, following quickly in Del Mar's wake.

"Look," called the emissary to Del Mar, spying the Dodge boat with the naturalist in it, skimming rapidly after them.

Del Mar strained his eyes back through his glass at the pursuing boat. But the naturalist, in spite of his smoked glasses, seemed not to have impaired his eyesight by his studies. He caught the glint of the sun on the lens at Del Mar's eye and dropped down into the bottom of his own boat, where he was at least safe from scrutiny, if his boat were not.

Del Mar lowered his glass. "That's the Dodge boat," he said thoughtfully. "I don't like the looks of that fellow. Give her more speed."

* * * * * * *

Del Mar had not gone long before Elaine decided to take a ride herself. She ordered her horse around from the stables while she donned her neat little riding habit. A few minutes later, as the groom held the horse, she mounted and rode away, choosing the road by which I had gone, expecting to meet me on the return from town.

She was galloping along at a good clip when suddenly her horse shied at something.

"Whoa, Buster," pacified Elaine.

But it was of no use. Buster still reared up.

"Why, what is the matter?" she asked. "What do you see?"

She looked down at the ground. There was a spot of blood in the dust. Buster was one of those horses to whom the sight of blood is terrifying.

Elaine pulled up beside the road. There was a revolver lying in the grass. She dismounted and picked it up. No sooner had she looked at it than she discovered the initials "W. J." carved on the butt.

"Walter Jameson!" she exclaimed, realizing suddenly that it was mine. "It's been fired, too!"

Her eye fell again on the blood spots. "Blood and—footprints—into the brush!" she gasped in horror, following the trail. "What could have happened to Walter?"

With the revolver, Elaine followed where the bushes were trampled down until she came to the place where I had been bound. There she spied some pieces of paper lying on the ground and picked them up.

She put them together. They were pieces of the envelope of the letter which we had decided to send to Washington.

"Which way did they take him?" she asked, looking all about but discovering no trail.

She was plainly at a loss what course to pursue.

"What would Craig do?" she asked herself.

Finding no answer, she stood thinking a moment, slowly tearing the envelope to pieces. If she were to do anything at all, it must be done quickly. Suddenly an idea seemed to occur to her. She threw the pieces of paper into the air and let them blow away. It was unscientific detection, perhaps, but the wind actually took them and carried them in the direction in which the men had forced me to walk, after they had robbed me of the letter.

"That's it!" cried Elaine to herself. "I'll follow that direction."

* * * * * * *

Meanwhile, the men had hurried me off along a trail that led to the foot of a cliff. Then the trail wound up the cliff. We climbed it until we reached the top.

There in the rock was a rude stairway. I drew back. But one man drew a gun and the other preceded me down. Along the steep stone steps cut in the face of the rock they forced me.

Below, in a rift in the very wall of the cliff, was a cave in which already were two more of Del Mar's men, talking in low tones, in the dim light.

As we made our way down the breakneck stairway, the foremost of my captors stepped on a large flat rock. As he did so, it gave way slightly under his foot.

A light in the cave flashed up. Under the rock was a secret electric connection which operated a lamp.

"Someone coming," muttered the two men, on guard instantly.

It was a somewhat precarious footing as we descended and for the moment I was more concerned for my safety from a fall than anything else. Once my foot did slip and a shower of pebbles and small pieces of rock started down the face of the cliff.

As we passed down, the man behind me, still keeping me covered, raised the flat stone on the top step. Carefully he reset the connection of the alarm rock, a series of metal points that bent under the weight of a person and made a contact which signaled down in the cavern the approach of anyone who did not know the secret.

As he did so, the light in the cavern went out. "It's all right," said one of the men down there, with a look of relief.

We went down the perilous stairway until we came to the cave.

"I've got a prisoner—orders of the chief," growled one of my captors, thrusting me in roughly.

They forced me into a corner where they tied me again, hand and foot. Then they began debating in low, sinister tones, what was to be done with me next. Once in a while I could catch a word. Fear made my senses hypersensitive.

They were arguing whether they should make away with me now or later!

Finally the leader rose. "It's three to one," I heard him mutter. "He dies now."

He turned and took a menacing step toward me.

"Hands up!"

It was a shrill, firm voice that rang out at the mouth of the cave as a figure cut off what little light there was.

* * * * * * *

Elaine passed along, hunting for the trail. Suddenly a shower of pebbles came falling down from a cliff above her. Some of them hit her and she looked up quickly.

There she could see me being led along by my captors. She hid in the brush and watched. During all the operations of the descent of the rock stairway and the resetting of the alarm she continued to watch, straining her eyes to see what they were doing.

As we entered the cave, she stepped out from her concealment and looked sharply up at us, as we disappeared. Then she climbed the path up the cliff until she came to the flight of stone steps leading downward again.

Already she had seen the man behind me doing something with the stone that formed the top step. She stooped down and examined the stone. Carefully she raised it and looked underneath before stepping on it. There she could see the electric connection. She set the stone aside and looked again down the dangerous stairway.

It made her shudder. "I must get him," she murmured to herself. "Yes, I must. Even now it may be too late."

They had just decided to make away with me immediately and the leader had turned toward me with the threat still on his lips. It was now or never. Resolutely she took a step forward and into the cave.

"Hands up!" she demanded with astonishing firmness.

The thing was so unexpected in the security of their secret hiding place protected by the rock alarm that, before they knew it, Elaine had them all lined up against the wall.

Keeping them carefully covered, she moved over toward me. She picked up a knife that lay near by and started to cut the ropes with which I was bound.

Keeping Them Covered, We Made Our Way Up the Dangerous High Steps.

As she did so, one of the men, with an oath, leaped forward to rush her. But Elaine was not to be caught off her guard. Instantly she fired. The man staggered back and fell.

That cooled the ardor of the other three considerably, especially now as I was free, too. While she held them up still, with their hands in the air, I went through their pockets, taking out their weapons.

Then, still keeping them covered, we backed out of the cave. Backward we made our way up the dangerous flight of steps again with guns leveled at the cave entrance, Elaine going up first.

Once a head stuck itself out of the cave entrance. I fired instantly and it jerked itself back in again just in time. That was the only trouble we had, apparently.

Cautiously and slowly we made our way toward the top of the cliff.

* * * * * * *

One look backward from his motorboat was enough for Del Mar. He must evade that inquisitive naturalist. He turned to his man.

"Get out that apparatus," he ordered.

The man opened a locker and brought out the curious submarine rescue helmet and suit. Del Mar took them up and began to put the suit on, stooping down in the shelter of the boat so that his actions could not be seen by the naturalist in the pursuing boat.

The naturalist was all this time peering ahead keenly at Del Mar's boat, trying to make it out. He bent over and adjusted the engine to get up more speed and the boat shot ahead faster.

By this time, Del Mar had put on the submarine apparatus, all except the helmet, and was crouching low in the boat. Hastily he rolled a piece of canvas into the semblance of a body, put his coat and hat on it and set it on the seat which he had occupied before.

Just then Del Mar's boat ran around the promontory where Wu Fang had met the submarine that had brought Del Mar into the country and landed him so strangely.

The boat slowed down under shelter of the rocks and Del Mar added a pair of heavy lead-soled shoes to his outfit in order to weigh himself down. Finally he put on the helmet, let himself over the side of the boat, and disappeared into the water.

His aide started the motor and the boat shot ahead again, with the dummy still occupying Del Mar's seat. As the boat swung out and made a wide sweeping curve away from the point at which Del Mar had gone overboard, the naturalist in the Dodge boat came around the promontory and saw it, changing his course accordingly, and gaining somewhat.

* * * * * * *

Del Mar sank upright and rapidly, down in the shallow water to the bottom. Once having his feet on something approaching firm ground, he gazed about through the window-like eye of the helmet until he got his bearings. Then he began to walk heavily along the bottom of the harbor, over sand and rocks.

It was a strange walk that he took, half stumbling, slowly and cumbersomely groping his way like a queer under-water animal.

If anyone could have seen him, he would have noted that Del Mar was going toward the base of a huge, rocky cliff that jutted far out into the harbor, where the water was deep, a dangerous point, avoided by craft of all kinds. Far over his head the waves beat on the rocks angrily. But down there, concealed beneath the surface of the harbor, was a sort of huge arch of stone, through which a comparatively rapid current ran as the tide ebbed and flowed.

Del Mar let himself be carried along with the current, which was now running in and thus with comparative ease made his way, still groping, through the arch. Once under it and a few feet beyond, he deliberately kicked off the leaden-soled shoes and, thus lightened, rose rapidly to the surface of the water.

As he bobbed up, a strange sight met his eyes—not strange, however, to Del Mar. Above, the rocks formed a huge dome over the water which the tides forced in and out through the secret entrance through which he came. No other entrance, apparently, except that from the waters of the harbor led to this peculiar den.

Lying quietly moored to the rocky piers lay three submarine boats. Further back, on a ledge of rock, blasted out, stood a little building, a sort of office or headquarters. Near by was a shed where were kept gas and oil, supplies and ammunition; in fact, everything that a submarine could possibly need.

This was the reason for Del Mar's presence in the neighborhood. It was the secret submarine harbor of the foreign agents who were operating in America!

Already a sentry, pacing up and down, had seen the bubbles in the water that indicated that someone had come through the archway and was down "below," as Del Mar and his men called it.

Gazing down, the sentry saw the queer helmeted figure float up from the bottom of the pool. He reached out and helped the figure clamber up out of the water to the ledge on which he stood. Del Mar saluted, and the sentry returned the secret salute, helping him remove the dripping helmet and suit.

A moment later, in the queer little submarine office, Del Mar had evidently planned to take up the nefarious secret work on which he was engaged. Several men of a naval and military bearing were seated about a table already, studying maps and plans and documents of all descriptions. They did not seem to belong to any nation in particular. In fact, their uniforms, if such they might be called, were of a character to disguise their nationality. But that they were hostile to the country under which they literally had their hidden retreat, of that there could be no doubt.

How high Del Mar stood in their counsels could have been seen at a glance from the instant deference exhibited at the mere mention of his name by the sentry who entered with the submarine suit while Del Mar got himself together after his remarkable trip.

The men at the council table rose and saluted as Del Mar himself entered. He returned the salute and quietly made his way to the head of the table where he took a seat, naturally.

"This is the area in which we must work first of all," he began, drawing toward him a book and opening it. "And we must strike quickly, for if they heed the advice in this book, it may be too late for us to take advantage of their foolish unpreparedness."

It was a book entitled "Defenseless America," written by a great American inventor, Hudson Maxim.

Del Mar turned the pages until he came to and pointed out a map. The others gather about him, leaning forward eagerly as he talked to them.

There, on the map, with a radius of some one hundred and seventy miles, was drawn a big segment of a circle, with Peekskill, New York, marking the center.

"That is the heart of America," said Del Mar, earnestly. "It embraces New York, Boston, Philadelphia. But that is not the point. Here are the great majority of the gun and armor factories, the powder and cartridge works, together with the principal coal fields of Pennsylvania."

He brought his fist down decisively on the table. "If we hold this section," he declared, "we practically hold America!"

Eagerly the other emissaries listened as Del Mar laid before them the detailed facts which he was collecting, the greater mission than the mere capture of Kennedy's wireless torpedo which had brought him into the country. Detail after detail of their plans they discussed as they worked out the gigantic scheme.

It was a war council of a secret advance guard of the enemies of America!

* * * * * * *

Meanwhile, Del Mar's man in his boat, cutting a wide circle and avoiding the Dodge boat carrying the naturalist, made his way across the harbor until he came to the shore.

There he landed and proceeded up the beach to the foot of a rocky cliff, where he turned and followed a trail up it to the top. It was the same path already traveled by my captors with me and later followed by Elaine.

As he came stealthily out from under cover, Del Mar's man gazed down the stairway. He drew back at what he saw. Slowly he pulled a gun from his pocket, watching down the steps with tense interest. There he could see Elaine and myself wearily climbing toward the top, our backs toward him, as we covered the men in the cave.

So surprised was he at what he saw that he forgot that his boat below had been followed by the mysterious naturalist, who, the moment Del Mar's man had landed, put on the last burst of speed and ran the Dodge boat close to the spot where the aide had left Del Mar's.

A glance into the boat sufficed to tell the naturalist that the figure in it was only a dummy. He did not pause, but followed the trail up the hill until he was close after the emissary ahead, going more slowly.

Only a few feet further along the cliff, the naturalist paused, too, keeping well under cover, for the man was now just ahead of him. He looked fixedly at him and saw him gaze down the cliff. Then he saw him slowly draw a gun.

Who could be below? Quickly the naturalist's mind seemed to work. He crouched down, as if ready to spring.

The emissary slowly raised his revolver and took careful aim at the backs of Elaine and myself, as we came up the steps.

But before he could pull the trigger, the naturalist, more like one of the wild animals which he studied than like a human being, sprang from his concealment in the bushes and pounced on the man from behind, seizing him firmly.

Over and over they rolled, struggling almost to the brink of the precipice.

* * * * * * *

Elaine and I had got almost to the top of the flight of steps, when suddenly we heard a shout above us and sounds of a terrific struggle. We turned and saw two men.

Nearer and nearer the edge of the cliff they rolled. We crouched closer to the rocky wall, gazing up at the death grapple of the two. Who they were we did not know but that one was fighting for and the other against us we could readily see.

The more vicious of the two seemed to be forcing the naturalist slowly back, when, with a superhuman effort, the naturalist braced himself. His foot was actually on a small ledge of rock directly at the edge of the cliff.

He swung around quickly and struck the other man. The vicious looking man pitched headlong over the cliff.

We shrank back closer to the rock as the man hurtled through the air only a few feet from us. Down below, we could hear him land with a sickening thud.

Far over the edge Elaine leaned in a sort of fascination at the awful sight. For a moment I thought the very imp of the perverse had got possession of her and that she herself would fall over. She brushed her hand unsteadily over her eyes and staggered. I caught her just in time.

It was only an instant before the brave girl recovered control of herself.

We reached the top of the stairway and gazed about for the victor in the contest. To our surprise he was gone.

"Come," I urged, "we had better get away quickly."

A CHEF AND A CHAUFFEUR

Story of the Newly Rich.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

When the Doolans fell heir to Uncle Peter Doolan's accumulated millions they gave away the modest grocery business in Sunset and sped to New York, prepared to storm the citadel of society. Once there, established in a luxuriously appointed mansion, they promptly lost their identity as the Doolan family and became known as the "Peter Paul Dulands."

"If it wasn't for Cherry, here, we never could have done it," sighed Mrs. Duland, looking affectionately at her daughter.

"Done what, mother?" Cherry asked sharply. She was a slender, fair girl with an apple blossom complexion, dark blue Irish eyes, long black curling lashes and dusky hair.

"This!" Mrs. Duland waved a fat white hand, sparkling with precious stones. "Society!"

Cherry dropped to her knees beside her mother's chair.

"Mother," she said tensely, "we are not really in 'society,' as you call it. We have a few friends as rich and lonely and out of place as ourselves, and so we cling together, but we are all unhappy! Let us go back to Sunset!"

"Cherry, stop! Give up all this?" Mrs. Duland's voice was horror smitten.

"It's deadly dull," drooped Cherry.

"Dull! What's the child wanting?" grieved Mrs. Duland, forgetting her newly acquired accent. "You, with your fine clothes, automobiles and theayters and dancing and all! What would your poor father say?"

He would confess that he was tired of the glitter and emptiness. I know he would rather be back in Sunset, even in the old grocery store with his cronies around him and"—

"Be still, child," interrupted her mother harshly.

"And you, too, mother. I know you miss the old neighborhod life and the village meetings and"—

"Hush, Cherry!" broke in Mrs. Duland in a panicky tone. "The very idea of my giving up all this—for the kitchen!"

"But you wouldn't have to work any more. We could build a nice house and have servants"—

A tap at the door interrupted Cherry's coaxing. A servant stood there, a very smart parlor maid, of whom the Dulands were rather in awe.

"Excuse me, ma'am, but there's a person to see about an advertisement," she said.

Mrs. Duland looked puzzled. Then her face cleared.

"Oh, yes. I told Peter to advertise for a chef and a new chauffeur. That Frenchman was so reckless I couldn't stand him. Send him up, Mary."

Mary vanished, and Mrs. Duland turned to Cherry, who was standing by the window looking dreamily out at the passing show on the avenue.

"See here, Cherry Duland!" hissed her mother through set teeth. "If your homesickness is due to your pining for that good for nothing Jimmy Lee, who's nothing but a clerk in the Sunset pharmacy, why"—

Another tap at the door, and Mary ushered in a tall young man, who ducked a nervous bow as Mrs. Duland put up a lorgnette and surveyed him coldly.

As a matter of fact, Mrs. Duland could not visualize clearly through the lens and in secret reverted to her old fashioned steel bowed spectacles.

All she saw was a tall figure, a blur of dark features. She heard a level, rather monotonous voice.

"Well," she said kindly, "I understand you are looking for a position?"

"Yes, madam."

"Are you a chef, or, of course, you are a chauffeur?"

"Both, madam."

"Both?"

"Yes, madam."

"The idea!" breathed Mrs. Duland, staring from the applicant to Cherry's still form in the window. "What is your name?"

"James—James."

"James James? Well, James, what experience have you had in driving cars?"

Modestly James told Mrs. Duland that he was a recent graduate of a well known school for automobile drivers and his experience was limited to a four weeks' engagement with Mrs. Hollinsworth Smyth.

"And why did you leave, James?"

"Mrs. Smith died suddenly, madam."

Mrs. Duland was startled.

"Automobile accident?" she asked sharply.

"Providence," corrected James respectfully.

"You had better see Mr. Duland, James. He will know better what your requirements should be. This is his office address."

"Thank you, madam."

"If Mr. Duland is not satisfied that you can drive our car you might return here, James. Perhaps you can cook better than you can drive."

"Yes, madam, thank you," said James, and he respectfully withdrew.

"Cherry, what did you think of him?"

Cherry came from the window, her eyes shining, an odd look in her lovely face.

"Of the chauffeur—or the chef?" she asked, dimpling with smiles.

"Both!" said Mrs. Duland and laughed. "It is like old times to see you smile like that, Cherry, child. Are you so unhappy?" she asked wistfully.

"Not at all," assured Cherry, kissing her mother on both cheeks.

"If you want you can go back to Sunset tomorrow. You can board at Mrs. Flood's for awhile, and maybe"—

"I'm not going, mother. I wouldn't go for the world!" she ended emphatically.

"Not even—even to see Jimmy Lee?"

"I wouldn't go to Sunset to see Jimmy Lee—now," assured Cherry with dancing eyes, and Mrs. Duland was satisfied that the budding romance was indeed blighted.

At dinner that night Peter Paul Duland looked across the cozy round table at his wife.

"I hired that young feller for chauffeur," he said abruptly.

"If you hadn't I should have hired him to cook. He could do either," laughed Mrs. Duland.

"So you liked this James?" mused Duland; then, suddenly, to Cherry he added, "What did you think of him, honey?"

"She never even saw him. Stood looking out the window all the time," cut in Mrs. Duland.

Cherry smiled vaguely and changed the subject. She knew that the servants were secretly laughing at them for making so much of this business of hiring a chef or a chauffeur. Cherry hated these superior servants, and a fierce loyalty to her parents prompted her to be especially tender with them that evening.

"You are more like Cherry Doolan of Sunset days," said Peter Paul, stroking her dark hair.

"I love Cherry Doolan, and I hate Charlotte Duland," smiled Cherry.

A silence brooded over the three Dulands, who before the millions came had been happy Doolans. At last Peter Paul roused himself.

"I had a letter from Finch today. He says the business is running down."

"It lacks your hand, Peter," said Mrs. Duland, and Cherry knew they were all thinking of the old happy days.

* * * * * * * *

The following day Mrs. Duland and Cherry went shopping.

The new chauffeur drove the shining car.

Mrs. Duland was distinctly dismayed at James' reckless driving.

"He will kill us, Cherry," she gasped as they dodged in and out of the maze of vehicles, to stop abruptly at the traffic officer's whistle.

Cherry was pale, perhaps with fear, but her eyes shone.

"Would you like to change to a taxi, mother?" she asked.

"Yes. Tell James to stop at Buffam's."

Cherry picked up the tube.

"Buffam's, James," she ordered.

The limousine drew up at the curb, and James opened the door.

"I will meet you at the Plaza for lunch, mother," and before Mrs. Duland could recover her breath the limousine shot away up the avenue.

"The park, James," said Cherry.

When they reached the park, passing a soda fountain, Cherry called a halt.

"A cherry phosphate," she said to the chauffeur.

"Yes, Miss Duland." He touched his cap and walked a few hundred yards toward a tiny confectionery store.

When he returned he carried a brimming glass of dark red liquid.

"Thank you, Jimmy," she said, smiling at him over the glass.

"James, if you please, Miss Duland," he said, and his lips were white.

"Miss Doolan, if you please, Jimmy," she mocked him.

For awhile he was silent, gazing at her with his heart in his eyes.

"Why did you do it, Jimmy?" whispered Cherry.

"You know! I wanted to come, and then—your father sent for me."

"Father? Then he knows?" breathed Cherry.

"Yes. I was glad to be near you, although I did not expect to be recognized by your fashionable friends. It wasn't that hope, Cherry—I mean Miss Duland."

"Duland! Pooh!" Cherry snapped her fingers. "I am Cherry Doolan and will be until"— She paused.

"And will be until"— he prompted.

"Until I'm not!" she flashed back. "Jimmy Lee, that white linen coat you wore in the drug store was vastly more becoming than this one!"

"Ah, Cherry, you really mean it?" he asked eagerly.

Cherry held out the glass.

"Taste it, Jimmy," she commanded, but first she touched the brim with her own lips. "Taste it, Jimmy."

He took glass and little hand in his and tasted the bitter concoction.

"It's nectar," he murmured.

"The same old Jimmy," she whispered, and tears were in her eyes.

That night at dinner the Dulands had a guest, one whose presence caused a titter of amusement among the servants.

It was James, the chauffeur, who appeared to be equally popular with Cherry's parents.

After dinner, while they sat in the cozy library, Mary, the parlor maid, brought a telegram.

Open mouthed with surprise, Peter Paul Duland read it aloud. It was from his lawyers in San Francisco:

"Just learned your Uncle Peter's son, reported dead, is alive. Arrived from Australia today. Claims entire fortune. Accept sympathy. Come at once."

The Dulands stared at one another and then at Jimmy Lee.

"Thank God!" they said in unison. And thus the Dulands gave back to the Doolans their old happy, commonplace life.

SHRAPNEL SHELLS.

Various Types In Use and the Mass of Bullets They Carry.

Most nations are agreed that the three inch shrapnel is the most effective for killing men in modern warfare. The three inch type, which is almost universally used, contains from 210 to 360 half inch lead bullets, bunched together in the front part of the shell. A time fuse, which is made with the accuracy of a watch, is graduated in seconds and is set to explode at a given range as determined by the artillerymen.

The velocity of the shell may be gathered from the fact that it travels a mile in four seconds and within a quarter of a minute is four miles from the mouth of the gun. At any time during this rapid flight the shell can be made to explode with marvelous precision and deadly effectiveness, driving its bullets in a cone shaped shower down on the heads of the enemy.

A remarkable fact regarding these shells is that the velocity of the bullets when the shell explodes exceeds the velocity of the shell at the time of the explosion by from 250 to 300 feet per second, the bullets of a bursting shell covering a zone about thirty yards wide and 250 yards long.

Shrapnel shells used by different governments at the present time all operate on the same principle, but differ somewhat as to size and the arrangements of the fuse.—Pearson's Weekly.

In Sympathy.

The two men had met at a dinner party and were talking in a corner by themselves.

"You see that tall woman with the sharp nose and the critical eye?" asked one of them.

"Yes," said the other quietly.

"Well, I've watched her for quite awhile. She's always got her nose into somebody's business. She's the last woman I'd marry."

"Which shows how strangely in sympathy we are," said the other without resentment. "She's the last woman I did marry."—Exchange.

Bacteria in Meat.

In recent issues of the American Journal of Public Health there is described a new method of determining the bacteria content of meat. The meat is ground in a mortar with sterile sand and normal salt solution to obtain an emulsion for inoculation into the culture media, and the report described the application of this method to the determination of the bacterial content of a number of samples of market hamburger steak. The result showed that the standard of 1,000,000 bacteria a gram sometimes advocated as a maximum limit for the salable product is much too low, as nearly all the samples examined would be condemned on this basis, though showing no taint or other evidences of putrefaction. The authors propose a limit of 10,000,000 bacteria a gram, though even on this basis the market samples of hamburger steak would still be condemned.

Italy's Red Dates.

May holds some fateful anniversaries for Italy. It was on May 20, 1800, that Napoleon crossed the Alps, and on May 26, five years later, that he proclaimed himself king of Italy. On May 3, 1859, the French entered Genoa, and on the 20th of the same month saw the heavy defeat of the Austrians at Montebello. In May of the following year the French troops left Italy, and Garibaldi made his famous descent upon Sicily.—Pall Mall Gazette.

My First Day Out Since the Accident

STARTED for work eight weeks ago, stumbled, fell, broke an ankle; been home ever since, mending.

My ÆTNA ACCIDENT POLICY has kept me in funds, however. Paid me every month at the rate of $50 a week. Would have paid the hospital, too, had I gone there. Now that I'm out, I'll get $25 a week until I can go to work.

You're a wise man and ought to investigate this ÆTNA proposition. When you learn the ÆTNA people have paid over 128,000 claims, you wonder how you've gone so long without getting a hard jolt from Old Man Accident, don't you?

ÆTNA-IZE

Play safe. No man can afford to pay out for sickness or accident today what he can't get back tomorrow.
